CLR Members,

I am very proud of the way the construction sector is meeting the COVID-19 crisis head on. We are proving our strength and resiliency every day.

As we begin a new week under the weight of this pandemic, I wanted to send a brief message to remind you that we still have a ways to go yet. We are starting to hear messages like the isolation period for non-international travel cases where exposure may have occurred reducing to 10 days. On the news, we are hearing that due to the isolation practices we have been following, we may be slowing down the incidents of exposure and spread. It is great that there seems to be some progress, but PLEASE don't let that result in any relaxation of your efforts on job sites, in your offices or at home. If we are in fact slowing the spread, it is because we are following the guidelines of the Provincial Health Officer and government. Now is not the time to ease up. We must all continue to follow the personal safety and worksite protocols.

Our government has deemed us in construction and maintenance to be an essential service. Our businesses, our workers and the economy are counting on us to do our best not only today but in the days, weeks and months ahead.

Please continue to watch for our emails as we do our best to bring you the most current and relevant information and content to help keep you informed in these challenging times.

Sincerely,

Ken McCormack | President & CEO
